SPRING.

Sweet balmy Spring I wolcome thee, With all thy budding flowers; With rapture I their coming greet, Ameng the fragtant bowers.

12

The fattle birds thy welcome sing. with enge so wild and free; Deir merry notes around me ring. Sporting from tree to tree.

I hell thee with thy sunny bloom, And merning's sweetest hours; They dissipate the winter's gloom, and nature clothed with flowers.

A type of hope thou'rt to the heart, When sorrows round it cling; Though clouds our path awhile may dim We hope Eternal Spring.

TWO NEIGHBORS AND THE HENS.

Aman in New Jersey states the following circumstances respecting timuself and one of his neighbors:

"I once owned a large flock of hens. I generally kept them shut up. But, one spring, I concluded to let them run in my vard, after I had clipted their wings so they could not fly .--One day, when I came home to dinner, I learned that one of my neighbors had been there, full of wrath, to let me know my hens had been in his en?" garden, and that he had killed several of them, and thrown them over into my vard. I was greatly enraged because he had killed my beautiful tiens, that I valued so much. I determined, at once to be revenged, to my bitter, lasting enemy. I conclu- turned to his host, and said:fied to try another way, being sure it would be better.

'After dinner I went to my neigh | bye.' tor's. He was in his garden. ! went out and tound him in persuit of one of my nens, with a club myin, to bill it. I accorted tim. He turned upon me, his face inflamed with in the following manner: wrath, I to be out in a great fary -

You have at used me. I was Life! your hens, it I can get them. I nev ! er was so abused. My garden is rumed.

I am very sorry for it,' said I. I do not with to injure you, and now see that I have made a great mistake in letting out my Lens. I ask your forgiveness, and am willing to pay you six times the damage."

The man seemed confounded .-He did not know what to make of die." r. He looked up at the sky-then down at she carth - then at his club and then of the pear hen he had been parents, and earl nothing.

"Tell me," said I, what is the dammy bene shall trouble you no more. I will be real entire by to you to say what I shall up. I connot afford to I se the love and good will of my neighbors, and quarter with them. for heus, or anything else."

"I AM A GREAT FOUL!" said the neightalking about; and I have more need mine."
